Beaumont cover-up: We will not be silenced

by JOHN WATERS

IN their efforts to conceal the pandemic of criminality erupting from the Covid scam, state authorities are going to greater and greater lengths in trying to silence the few who are calling out their corruption.

The injunction sought by Beaumont Hospital against Gemma O'Doherty last month revealed their desperation. We fought back and left the system struggling to remain even within its own generous limits of malfeasance.

The application originally made on June 14th ex parte (in the absence of the defendant who heard about it in the media) was an Orwellian attempt to gag Gemma from reporting on the litany of complaints coming from staff about the hospital's mandatory vaccine policy.

Beaumont CEO Ian Carter sought an interlocutory injunction against her but failed to turn up to the actual hearing providing no possibility for Gemma to cross-examine him and the other plaintiff Marie Murray, the hospital's Director Of Nursing who is the subject of copious complaints from staff who say she has put tremendous pressure on them to take the experimental injection and punished them by removing them from their patients if they refuse.

Gemma submitted voluminous evidence by affidavit outlining not merely the sequences of events she had investigated in Beaumont, but also copious background information - now widely available, though not in the corrupt mainstream media - about the dangers of Covid vaccines, which had caused a shocking 67 deaths in Ireland alone by the date of the hearing.

Beaumont's application was camouflaged as a defamation case, but really sought a 'gagging' order forbidding Gemma from ventilating the most crucial facts about the hospital's treatment of its own staff, an issue with huge implications for the well-being of the general public.

Gemma O'Doherty and John Waters at the High Court in Dublin following Beaumont Hospital's attempt to silence staff reports on its mandatory vaccine policy.

Such an injunction would normally be considered in only very unusual conditions: that the matter had some special element of privacy and had no significant public interest or reasonable chance of being defended at full trial in front of a jury.

These three together amount to a high bar, and none of them apply in this case. That a state-run hospital should run to a state-run court to try to muzzle a journalist and prevent scrutiny of its own beleaguered operations ought to provoke a nationwide outcry.

Of course part of the purpose of the exercise, using the ex parte hearing (which Gemma was not informed about), was to put the hospital's spin into the public domain: Gemma O'Doherty is an extremist and/or telling untruths. This version had already been widely reported on innumerable corrupt media platforms. Guilty until proven innocent. It could hardly be further from the truth.

Gemma's affidavit contained numerous scientific reports, staff testimonies and copious evidence of the hospital's shocking legacy of poor patient care.

The fact that Ian Carter and Marie

Murray failed to turn up to their own hearing says it all. What were they afraid of? Gemma asked Judge Senan Allen to bring them into court so they could be cross-examined on oath. He looked miserable and declined.

It is quite clear that the 'issue' at the heart of the case, from the viewpoint of Beaumont and the judge is: How do we rid ourselves of this disorderly woman?

They cannot do so, anymore than they can rid themselves of the consequences of the crimes in which they are now embroiled.

Gemma and I shall continue to point out the truth, to take the battle into the belly of the beast, and by the very process of doing so we achieve a continuous victory over the criminals.

We are, in effect, asking: What chance does the citizen really have of succeeding against the tyrannical Government and the institutions of State, which are supposed to exist to serve the people and are paid for by them?

Is it possible to encounter any quality of independence within the legal system?

Because no one else stood up to challenge the state when this cried out to be done last year, we decided we had a duty to do so. We put ourselves forward - on our own behalf, but also on behalf of the Irish People - past, present and as yet unborn - in saying to the corrupt powers-that-be: What is happening is wrong and must be brought to an end.

We undertook to do this in our capacities as citizens and human beings possessed by a deep love of our country. We did it so that others, if they so wished, could see themselves in us and join us in spirit, as many have done.

And we pledged that, all along the way, we would describe what happened without fear or flinching.

That we have done, and will continue to do, right to the very end.

We shall not be silenced.
We shall not be scared off.
We shall never surrender.

Did vaccines cause sharp rise in deaths in early 2021?

VACCINES: THE HORRIFIC INJURY TOLL

Covid vaccines killed 67 people in Ireland and injured almost 10,000 in the first five months of the year, according to the HPRA (Health Products Regulatory Authority) - the Irish vaccine licensing body. Under normal circumstances, a drug would be withdrawn following 50 deaths but HPRA head Lorraine Nolan continues to put Irish lives at risk and the slaughter continues unabated.

SUSPECTED SIDE EFFECTS TO MRNA VACCINES

A breakdown of suspected side effects described in the 4605 reports notified to the HPRA is provided below by category. Each report describes at least one suspected side effect for a vaccinated individual. Reports often describe several suspected side effects for an individual, including more than one in a specific category. As such, there are more suspected side effects in each category and overall, as compared to the number of reports received.

IN early January 2021, the death rate in Ireland escalated sharply. The Government and media were quick to blame Covid whilst ignoring the most obvious cause - the roll-out of the experimental 'vaccine,' which official figures show has already killed tens of thousands of people around the world.

During the winter months of 2020, there was no excess mortality in Ireland, a pattern which continued up until January 7th.

Then suddenly, the death rate shot up by 15%. By the end of the following week, it soared to 40%. By week four, the death rates were numbers, Ireland had 1169 unexplained deaths over a two month period.

A newspaper report in the Irish Times on March 12th 2021 about the deaths of 9 elderly people in a nursing home in Trim County Meath is one of many in recent months.

The report said: "The HSE has confirmed that first doses of the vaccine were administered at St Joseph's Community Nursing Unit on January 12th and 13th, with all eligible residents being vaccinated."

"An outbreak of the disease was declared at the nursing home on January 20th with 25 residents at the 50-bed care facility testing positive for Covid-19. Nine residents died during the course of the outbreak."

There was no influenza recorded in Ireland in January or February 2021. The only new addition to the mix was an experimental Covid 'vaccine' which was rolled out in Ireland in early January.

An Irish Times headline on January 29th seemed to suggest there was nothing out of the ordinary happening in the country:

Covid-19: Majority of fatalities had underlying conditions

In the Irish Independent on January 30th, the country's Chief Medical Officer, Dr. Tony Holohan said:

"We have experienced over 1,000 deaths and more than 100,000 cases (Covid) in January. This shows just how quickly this disease can spread and how much it can impact public health."

The official narrative is that everyone met one another over Christmas 2020 and a UK variant spread like wildfire amongst the people causing a large number of deaths in January and February.

Some will swallow this as a plausible story; but that's all it is - a story.

Public health officials and governments would have us believe they have identified new strains of something that the HSE has never even isolated: the virus that causes Covid-19.

Is this disease old wine in a new bottle? Or to put it another way: flu, pneumonia and other respiratory conditions all lumped together under the one umbrella and given a brand new, sinister sounding name.

Recent data from Ireland's Health Protection Surveillance Centre (HPSC) sheds further unwelcome light on the official Covid-19 pandemic story.

According to the HPSC, 1,129 adults with confirmed Covid were admitted to hospital Intensive Care units between March 2020 and January 2021.

Of the 698 people (62%) who survived and were subsequently discharged, 75% had primary viral pneumonia, 68% had acute respiratory distress syndrome (ARDS) and 28% had secondary bacterial pneumonia during their time in Intensive Care.

Intriguingly, Covid-19 is not mentioned as a serious medical condition. We can conclude from this omission, that this so-called distinctive life-threatening disease - is viewed very differently by clinicians.

People were in hospital intensive care units, but they appeared to be there for something else entirely - principally Pneumonia.

The government's lethal web of lies is catching up on them at last.

hovering around 50% above normal. In total, about 720 additional people died; half of them in nursing homes.

According to the CSO (Central Statistics Office), 3,919 death notices were recorded in January and 3,147 in February of this year.

This compares to a five-year average of deaths in January of 3,200 and 2,700 for February. When you add up the sad

'Climate Emergency' driven by faulty models and fake news

SCIENCE and the scientific method is a wonderful way of objectively testing theories and discovering facts about the real world. I should know as I did my PhD in Physical Chemistry. Facts have emerged which dismiss the distant scary futures predicted by climate models. The scariest scenarios are based on RCP8.5 (representative concentration pathways) with the greenhouse gas theory built into the models. The RCP8.5 scenario would require the world to burn 5 times the amount of coal per annum than we currently burn. That scenario is not credible.

I have worked with many of the so called 'greenhouse gases' before they were called 'greenhouse gases' and many are in fact liquids at room temperature (e.g. chlorofluoro hydrocarbons) and they did not display any unusual physical or chemical properties. They certainly did not get warmer than the ambient temperature in the laboratory, so I always wondered where this greenhouse gas scare came from.

It turns out it comes from faulty climate models which have been heavily criticised for being unable to forecast our present climate conditions from a previous starting point (called 'hindcasting') and which use circular reasoning by assuming the (proven wrong) greenhouse gas theory is at work with carbon dioxide as the main culprit, assisted by the much stronger effect of water vapour. These climate models ignore over 200 years of physics looking at solar cycles of varying lengths, which are completely natural. The cyclic nature of climate was well known in ancient China circa 3200BC and these cycles affect weather conditions in a predictable way. Noting that climate is the average of weather conditions over a 30 year period, physicists have been unable to reproduce the greenhouse effect in laboratory experiments and they conclude that it is falsified and does not exist.

The IPCC stopped calling their forecasts a 'climate forecast' after criticism and they are now called 'projections' which perhaps has less veracity than a real forecast as it is simply a mathematical model run on a computer that has been allowed to generate output with no physical meaning for any potential incarnation in the distant future. It is like running a cash flow forecast for a business over the next 80 or 100 years and setting your corporate strategy based on that. Many things can happen in 80 or 100 years and if there is no physical mechanism related to carbon dioxide and the climate then it simply won't happen. The models are wrong.

The so called 'Climate Emergency' and policies to tackle it are all based on these faulty mathematical models. Things are not what we are told, nor will they be far into the future. Things are not getting worse. That's right things are getting better! Scientific investigation looking at measurable facts tells us that storms and hurricanes are fewer and less severe, droughts are fewer, floods are not increasing, and forest fires are fewer and less severe. NASA photos tell us that there has been a greening of Earth in recent decades and the OECD and UN Food and Agriculture Organisation tell us that food production has increased, benefitting from slightly increased temperatures since the Little Ice Age and of course, increased fertilisation from slightly more carbon dioxide in the atmosphere.

The 415ppm of carbon dioxide in air is a trace gas which is at a much lower concentration than the trace gas Argon (at ~1% which is 10,000ppm). If things are getting better (e.g. fewer hurricanes and their intensity is getting less severe) and carbon dioxide concentration is increasing then there is a negative correlation between the two and not a positive one as the activists and politicians would have us believe. The fact is that there is no real mechanism for carbon dioxide to seriously influence the climate, so why are we being told there is a 'Climate Emergency' and to get away from cheap, plentiful fuels which we have learned to burn cleanly?

All evidence is in the public domain and easily accessed via web sites for NASA, NOAA, GISS and via other groups busy analysing the data. Thank goodness there are think tanks such as the Global Warming Policy Foundation in the UK (<https://www.thegwpf.org>), the Heartland Institute in the USA (<https://www.heartland.org/topics/climate-change>), the Science and Public Policy Institute (www.scienceandpublicpolicy.org) looking critically at the data and coming to broadly similar conclusions in their publications. The data and evidence tell us that there is no climate emergency.

500 scientists have written to the United Nations explaining this (<https://clintel.org/world-climate-declaration/>), again declaring that there is no climate emergency. Some 90 Italian scientists wrote in similar vein to the Italian government yet the 'Climate dioxide emissions by all political parties? The bulk of the population do not believe in a 'Climate Emergency' and many scientists have said there is no emergency. Farmers in my area are even less convinced since carbon dioxide is the fundamental basis of the entire food supply chain and most arable farms will have net negative emissions (i.e. they will absorb carbon dioxide to make our food).

The highly expensive remedies for this non-existent emergency enough to generate electricity we could be facing serious problems with power cuts. The so-called 'Smart Meters' can be used to turn off your electricity supply when there is insufficient energy generated to maintain frequency and voltage on the grid. He also noted that in the winter and summer in the UK the wind often does not blow strongly enough to generate energy for weeks at a time and solar panels generate little or no energy in winter and none in the dark.

So what we now see is the perfect storm of political lying and fake news. The politicians are hardly qualified to speak of anything to do with science and most politicians have no clue about energy generation. Worse is that government now does not have access to impartial experts as it closed the Central Electricity Generating Board (CEGB) research centres in the early 1990s and ended the slow death of the CEGB in 2001 (Central Electricity Generating Board (Dissolution) Order 2001). A very unhappy 20th anniversary.

Fact checking by any reasonably competent person can establish that the idea of a 'Climate Emergency' is a deception of the most egregious and dangerous kind. Yet all political parties have signed up to it to 'save the planet'. A noble cause perhaps, but to save it from what exactly? The idea that in 80 or 100 years' time there will be a small increase in temperature and fewer storms and hurricanes constitutes a 'Climate Emergency' is risible. It is even less credible when we realise there has been a statistically significant pause in the rise in average temperatures for over 20 years. Maybe we need to save the Earth from politicians, activists and the fake news media.

He currently teaches production and operations management.

Emergency' deception continues (Search: 90 Italian Scientists).

What happened to following the science? Whose science were they following? It was rhetoric and of no serious value in furthering debate on such a complicated matter where the proposed solutions are exorbitantly expensive (in the trillions of £s) and will achieve nothing for the future, but plenty for their bank balances.

There are numerous books often with 'False Alarm' and 'Fraud' in the title which correctly describe our current position on climate. That is, we are not facing any sort of catastrophe or crisis and there never was a 'climate emergency'. In fact we are living in a period of time which is highly beneficial and to make claims to the contrary is fraudulent and criminal.

So why is it necessary to have a Climate Change Act or expensive proposals to fight the non-existent 'Climate Emergency'? Why the stampede towards 'Net Zero' carbon are bad news for the consumer, businesses and the economy and will cost households and businesses dearly. The proposals to build more expensive intermittent and variable renewables such as wind turbines and solar panels because they are claimed to be 'low carbon' sources of energy will destabilise the electricity grid system and lead to blackouts. An economy relying heavily on information technology which requires electricity is extremely vulnerable to blackouts. Recovery from blackouts is not easy with so-called renewable energy and if the amount of renewable energy on the grid increases significantly it may prove impossible to restart the grid without conventional fuel energy generation.

One acquaintance was telling me that when the power goes off, which it has a couple of times quite recently, so does their water supply. In a future with heavy reliance on renewables, if the wind does not blow strongly

Masks do more harm than good

WHILST masks are a successful psychological tool to remind the public to remain alert, they are not effective in preventing the community spread of disease.

In the summer of 2020, mandates were introduced to compel healthy people to wear masks in the community, purportedly to reduce the spread of covid-19. Prior to this time, the World Health Organisation (WHO) and UK politicians alike did not originally support face coverings for the healthy but then u-turned, apparently in response to heavy political lobbying.

In the early stages of the novel coronavirus in the United Kingdom, public health advice remained that masks for the general public were of little benefit, and could even be harmful. There is emerging evidence that cloth masks can amplify the spread of particles by acting as a 'microniser', transforming large droplets, which would ordinarily fall swiftly to the ground close to the person, into smaller, truly airborne and respirable droplets.

As has been established in another of our articles on asymptomatic spread, for a person to be 'clinically relevant' in public health terms, they must have symptoms. The mandating of mask-wearing for the majority of the population who are perfectly healthy is not an effective public health measure to contain the spread of any disease. Prior to 2020 this was not a controversial position. Whilst masks have undoubtedly been a successful psychological tool to remind the public to remain alert, they have not achieved their primary objective, that is, to act as a safe and effective measure to curb the spread of disease.

Contrary to the government message that it 'follows the science', the sudden change in advice by the WHO was not based on any new, high-quality scientific studies. By summer 2020, there was substantial evidence that non-medical masks for the general public did not reduce the transmission of respiratory illnesses. A review of 14 controlled studies had concluded that masks did not significantly lessen the spread of seasonal 'flu in the community.

A Norwegian Institute for Public Health review found that non-medical masks achieve no benefit for healthy individuals, particularly when viral prevalence is low. From a common sense angle, scientists had argued that cloth masks contain perforations that are far too big to act as a viral barrier and therefore 'offer zero protection against covid-19'.

Inevitably, the public often wear masks incorrectly, or improperly handle them when putting them on, or removing them, constituting an additional infection hazard. There has been recognition of this contamination risk in the scientific literature and other researchers have cautioned against the use of cloth face coverings. Potential harms to the wearer include exhaustion, headaches, fatigue and dehydration. Some doctors have suggested an increased risk of pneumonia. Furthermore, the widely varying physical characteristics of the face coverings used by people in the community, that are not standardised for material, fit, length of wearing, changes after washing and drying, and disposal, means that laboratory research on mask efficacy cannot be generalised to real world situations.

With particular reference to covid-19, the only large randomised controlled trial exploring the benefits of adopting face coverings in the community found that masks (even the surgical variety) did not result in a significant reduction in infection risk for the wearer. A detailed analysis of all research investigations, including those purported to suggest that masks might achieve some benefits, led to the view that there is 'little to no evidence' that cloth masks in the general population are effective.

Masks impair verbal communication, render lip-reading impossible for the deaf, and stymie emotional expression, the latter effect potentially constituting a gross impediment to children's social development. Acting as a crude, highly visible reminder that danger is all around, face coverings are maintaining widespread, irrational fear.

Wearing a mask will heighten the distress of many people with existing mental health problems and may trigger 'flashbacks' for those historically traumatised by physical and/or sexual abuse. Sadly, going without a mask (even as a means of avoiding psychological distress) can often attract harassment and further victimisation. In response to this, 'exemption lanyards' have been developed, which further stigmatises those who cannot wear face coverings due to health conditions or psychological trauma.

The government are already talking about requiring secondary-school pupils to wear masks in indoor areas for the entire day. In addition to the lack of demonstrable benefits as described above, it is most concerning that no comprehensive risk assessment of potential harms has been carried out before making these demands. Prior to imposing this requirement for masks, a full assessment should have been conducted, incorporating the following areas:

- Assessment of oxygen levels in mask wearer at the beginning and end of the day
- Assessment of impairments to concentration and ability to learn
- Assessment of impairment to children with hearing difficulties and special educational needs
- Assessment of impairment to psychological well-being
- Assessment of possible damages from inhalation of micro-fibres
- Assessment of potential harms of repeated use of dirty cloth masks
- Assessment of impairment to non-verbal communication

Many of the potential harms may only become apparent in the long-term, thereby casting yet more doubt on the assumption that, for children, the benefits outweigh the risks. What is even more puzzling is that the masking requirement has been introduced at the time of year when there is almost no circulating covid-19 in the community due to its seasonality. There is no justification for this move from the Department for Education. It should be rapidly retracted for the safety and well-being of all children.

Wearing a mask is not a benign intervention. Making masks mandatory would only be justified if science had shown they achieved a marked reduction in transmission. The evidence is simply not there. On the contrary, it is clear that face coverings for healthy people do more harm than good. Additionally, evidence demonstrating that asymptomatic, healthy members of society are unlikely to spread the disease strengthens the conclusion that mask mandates are unnecessary.

Corporate hypocrisy abounds

There's a clever trick the elites use to avoid any blame from the side effects of their insane wealth hoarding. It takes on many different forms in diverse areas, but it always boils down to shifting the blame to you and the rest of the average Joes out there.

by TYLER S FARLEY

It's just another shift of responsibility away from the rulers and onto the backs of the average person who has no say in how almost anything in the world is run. The blame always goes to the people who have the least amount of power, and those who have all the power and resources to make beneficial changes never actually do anything to solve the problem. But it goes beyond just the

The plastic straw example as a perfect embodiment of this tactic, such as when well-publicised companies like Starbucks recently looked to bolster their image of being 'eco-friendly' by not handing out straws unless a customer specifically asked for one.

What's silly about this practice is that for over 20 years, Starbucks made billions and billions of dollars handing out single-use plastic cups, straws and lids. But now, suddenly it's the customer's fault for polluting the place if they dare to ask for a straw with their drink. It's as if Starbucks simply washed their hands of the countless metric tons of plastic they sold and now the problem is simply the fault of the consumers. If they ask for a straw, it is entirely their fault that the Earth is now polluted.

As you can see, the blame goes to the individual, not the corporation doing the majority of the polluting.

The same is the case with energy conservation and climate change. Companies made billions through industry or directly from selling conventional energy, but now suddenly the blame is shifted to the average Joe - if you leave a light on, or don't switch to unhealthy LED light bulbs, suddenly you're the cause of global warming, hurricanes and the extinction of a couple of rare species.

private sector - many public sector issues are handled the same way.

A perfect example was the absurd 'mask debate' we have had for the past year. Instead of blaming the public health system and officials who funded dangerous and unsafe experiments in China, the blame was shifted to everyday people who happen to not wear a mask or wore one incorrectly.

This was no different than the corporate trick of shifting blame, but in this case, much more sinister. It pitted people against each other so they wouldn't stop to see who their real enemy was and who was the real cause of the 'pandemic'.

The media and governments clearly lied from the very start, it was clear for all to see. But you would have never seen such sentiment on your evening news. Instead you saw videos of people fighting in grocery stores over silly mask rules. Such videos dominated the news cycles for days and even months, all the while the real perpetrators of the pandemic got off free and clear.

So be careful when companies or government officials start telling you it's your responsibility to fix their problems. What they're really doing is dumping their problems on you and moving on to their next act of exploitation.

Covid: most successful rebranding ever

WHAT happened to the 'flu? For as long as anyone can remember, this seasonal respiratory illness has taken a heavy toll on the frail and elderly. Typically, the ultimate cause of death is pneumonia, traditionally known as the 'old man's friend'. But since the covid-19 outbreak, official records show that influenza has almost disappeared. Many sceptics suspect that one virus has simply been renamed as another, driven by a worldwide campaign that has exploited public health to launch the 'Great Reset'.

Twenty-one years ago, Canadian journalist Naomi Klein wrote 'No Logo', a polemic against the use of marketing for predatory capitalism and cultural appropriation. An illusion of choice fooled the mostly youthful targets of advertising into accepting a society where everything is designed for them by corporate strategists.

by NIALL McRAE

'Products are made in the factory, but brands are made in the mind', said marketing man Walter Landor. A pandemic created by a huge marketing campaign on an old illness has been sold with the same tactics of big brands: flood the media and all public spaces with snappy messages, reinforced by influential figures. In the same way that Nike and Michael Jordan gained mutual publicity, so has US government scientist Anthony Fauci from covid-19.

Nike may have started with sneakers, but through the ubiquitous 'swoosh' logo, became a way of life. 'Just do it', the adverts implored:

wear the logo, live the logo. Mass marketing is an industry of deceit, more sophisticated in methods but of similar scruples as the second-hand car dealer on the Old Kent Road: 'Honest, gov - one lady driver'.

Covid-19, like Heineken, has reached the parts other diseases can not reach. Previous outbreaks such as swine flu and bird flu didn't catch on, because in reality they could not match the scaremongering. The lesson was clear: focus not only on deaths, but also on contagion. The grossest market is neither the healthy nor the ill, but in defining everyone on Earth as a potential carrier. By deliberately misusing the PCR laboratory procedure for mass testing, millions of 'asymptomatic' cases were found, with daily reports in every nation highlighting the invisible pathogenic spread.

It's how Walt Disney would do a fever: Imagery is everything. Masks were mandated not to prevent infection or transmission but for the constant visual reinforcement of a contrived plague. Morality is prominent in the marketing campaign: complying with the rules demonstrates a good person, someone who listens to experts and follows the science, but more importantly shows concern for others. Sceptics are thus 'reckless ignoramuses', readily identified by their uncovered and free-breathing mouths.

Like the Walmart expansion that destroyed America's Main Street, covid-19 has overshadowed all other healthcare, turning the NHS into the National Covid Service, at the expense of other more serious and prevalent conditions such as cancer. Massive resources have been channelled into testing, track

'n' trace and universal vaccination for a disease that is no worse than influenza. And as many suspect, maybe it is influenza simply rebranded.

The goal, however, is more sinister than brand monopolisation. The protagonists of the covid-19 regime want total control. What they have tried to do for decades with climate alarmism has been achieved in months, by manipulating fear. They have largely succeeded.

When Klein wrote No Logo at the turn of the millennium, mainstream media were sympathetic to anti-globalisation activism, but in this century the globalists have tightened their grip. Corrupted media organisations demonise ordinary people who try to fight the power. A custard pie thrown in Bill Gates' face in the 1990s was reported humorously; today it would be censored.

A brief history of our fiat money

IN 1861 Colonel Dick Taylor from Illinois had a revolutionary idea to help the North American Union win the civil war against the Confederate South. His friend, President Abraham Lincoln listened to his idea and implemented it. Not only did it win the war it enabled an extraordinary period of economic growth which scared the wits out of the British.

Having run out of funds for the war effort, Lincoln had tried to borrow money from the banks(ers), but they wanted to charge up to 36% interest. Lincoln knew if he agreed to those terms the US people would be yoked to a debt that would strangle the economy for years and that might never be paid off.

As Dick Taylor reminded him, the US Treasury was perfectly within its rights to print its own money based on the wealth, or economic output, of the nation, whether the banks liked it or not.

They didn't like it. If a government treasury produced its own notes the private banking industry couldn't make any profit on their interest-bearing government loans. Lincoln went ahead anyway and printed, instead of a banknote, a treasury note, called a 'Greenback' because it was green on one side. The Legal Tender Act 1862 was passed by Congress, declaring the Greenback dollar a fiat currency. Fiat, from the Latin, 'let it be done,' means 'by decree' a legal tender which has no intrinsic value. [It is argued by many that Britain today has a fiat currency, though the 'promise to pay the bearer on demand' written on our banknotes actually makes it a fiduciary currency, because another commodity is promised in exchange. That commodity is described by the UK Treasury as 'securities', but that's a whole other circular argument.]

by SIOBHAN MACKENZIE

The Greenback's birth was not without difficulty. California for one wouldn't agree to it, but then gold glinted richly in the Californian mud. Initially the value of the Greenback fell, but when the Union secured victory the value rose and stabilised.

The banks saw what was at stake. The London Times called it Lincoln's "mischievous financial policy". The editorial went on to say the U.S. government will "furnish its own money without cost. It will pay off debts and be without a debt. It will have all the money necessary to carry on its commerce. It will become prosperous beyond precedent." It added, "That government must be destroyed." In 1865, a month after announcing the Greenback dollar a success worth keeping, Abraham Lincoln was assassinated. Shortly afterwards the Greenback was abandoned.

Fast forward to 1914 in Britain. The banksters faced financial ruin at the outbreak of war when customers demanded their savings back in gold. To stop a run on the banks, the government extended the August bank holiday by 3 days. When the banks opened their doors again the public were allowed their savings, but not in gold.

David Lloyd George, then treasurer, issued treasury notes signed by the permanent secretary, John Bradbury. Just like the Greenback dollar, the 'Bradbury' Pound was a fiat currency based not on gold, but on the economic output of the nation. It was an interest-free, debt-free currency.

Britain accepted this treasury-backed currency and there was stability. However, soon after the treasury issued the Bradbury notes that saved the banks from financial ruin, the banksters demanded a return to the debt-based currency on which their profits depended. The Bradbury Pound was abandoned.

It wasn't the first time Britain had used a fiat currency. During the Napoleonic Wars William Pitt the Younger also had to move quickly to stop a run on banks' gold reserves.

Fractional reserve banking (the practise of decreasing the amount of gold that supported paper notes) meant that by 1797 banknotes in circulation had a collective face value of over £28 million, while the banks' reserves of gold amounted to only £2 million. Pitt created the Bank Restriction Act to release the banks from having to exchange banknotes for gold, in effect creating a fiat currency, a currency that relied on its accepted face value only.

Economists feared this would lead to hyperinflation and Pitt was heavily criticised. What was observed over the 24 years of the restriction was that GDP rose significantly, inflation fell, precious metals (real money) flowed into Britain and foreign exchange rates remained in Britain's favour. Paper money did not have to rely on precious metals. In fact it did better without them. How was this possible? An article from 1867 was equally surprised:

"If irredeemable government paper had been forced upon the public... it scarcely admits of a doubt that the result would have been a rise in prices and an increase of speculation. According to all the old currency theories, such ought now to have been the case with England. In fact, directly the contrary result took place".

The restriction lasted until 1821 during which time Britain overtook the Netherlands to become the largest economy in Europe.

History has shown it is possible for government treasuries to print money without causing hyperinflation. Look at the last decade of Quantitative Easing – in 2009 economists talked nervously of hyperinflation. That hasn't happened and western governments are still using QE to print money. QE, however, borrows with interest from private banks and we the people pay it back through high taxation. Governments and banksters collude in this stitch up, and in the end we are saddling our children with these debts while they get richer and richer.

Economists who argue for hyperinflation usually point to the Weimar Republic. In the Weimar Republic devaluation of the German Mark began with massive borrowing from banks for its failed war effort in WW1, was exacerbated by the payment of reparations to the victorious nations, and lost all control through the wild speculation of banksters. Similar uncontrolled speculation caused the 2008 'credit crunch'.

Perhaps we should reflect upon Henry Ford's words: "It is well enough that people of the nation do not understand our banking and monetary system, for if they did, I believe there would be a revolution before tomorrow morning."

What happened to rebellious artists?

Virtually every film maker, actor and musician promotes the establishment narrative on every subject

THERE was once a time not that long ago when you could count on artists to be one of the most rebellious groups in society. Such a thing is no new phenomenon as artists have always pushed the boundaries and been a thorn in the side of the establishment for hundreds of years.

But this has been true in modern pop culture as well. Artists, filmmakers, actors, and musicians were almost always anti-establishment. They may not have always been right, but that's not really the point. The point is that you could count on them to push back against the "official" narratives and get people thinking.

But those days are long gone if you've been paying attention to pop culture in the last few years. Now, when any actor or musician gets on stage or in front of the camera, you can hardly tell the difference between their words and the words of the government or their lackeys in the mainstream media. They spew the exact same talking points and arguments, often with even more passion than the professional pundits they are regurgitating.

by TYLER FARLEY

This is especially true in comedy where late night TV and parody shows bear no resemblance to what they were in the past.

In decades previous, late night TV would lampoon every politician, famous figure, and point of view. Parody shows like Saturday Night Live, while leaning left, would take turns bashing anyone in power and questioning norms. But those days are gone. Now both late night TV and parody shows are completely one-sided, only pushing the obvious mainstream agenda. It's boring, but worst of all, it's just not funny anymore as you know what's coming before you even turn on the TV.

The sad part is, parody and comedy in modern culture was a way to keep society in balance. Whenever one aspect of life was getting out of hand or becoming absurd, comedians would poke fun at it and parody it on TV or in movies. These parodies would make us all question what we were doing. They didn't tell us what to think, these parodies and comedy shows simply invited us to think. That's the big difference between the past and now. Every late night comedy show tells us what to think instead of just challenging us to think, which is what parody is designed to do.

Musicians these days are no different. Where music was once the refuge of counter-culture personalities, now it is filled with those parroting the establishment talking points. Young musicians and artists now fawn over 80 and 90 year-old politicians in a grotesque display of cowardice as they sell out to avoid having their careers destroyed for simply stating the obvious and going against the all-powerful media institutions.

It's a sad decline from years ago when musicians would happily stand up to any power structure, and even revelled in the idea of doing so.

I suppose it all comes down to this. How can you have art when all the artists have become slaves to the establishment? Has art simply become another tool of the establishment and a source of propaganda? If you've been watching for the last few years, it most certainly seems that way.

Beware 'Big Brother' blockchain

All that glitters is not necessarily a solution

THOSE in power will say: 'Blockchain is a secure way for people to own and control their digital footprint, the data they create living through devices and wearable / implantable / ingestible technology in "smart" environments.'

In essence, it is a digital ledger that keeps track of EVERYTHING across a decentralised computer network that is said to be permanent and secure. Picture a real time account book that keeps track not only of your monetary assets (bitcoin – this is how most folks understand blockchain), but also civil records like birth certificates, marriage certificates, and court proceedings; voting records; property ownership; certifications and education credentials; health information including DNA, biometrics, and data from wearable technologies; public benefit access like welfare; and now even one's movements (geolocation data) and social interactions via QR code health passports and contact tracing.

by JOHN HINDER

What I say:

Whether we know it or not, when we agree to have our lives linked to blockchain, we are agreeing to live in a behaviourist panopticon, a real-life permanent 'big brother' society. In exchange for convenience and limited privileges, we will give up our free will. The future being handed to us is one that will be shaped by surveillance, artificial intelligence, predictive analytics, machine learning, and feedback loops. We risk swapping our vibrant human spirits, beautiful in their passionate creativity and flawed vulnerability, for sanitised digital twins that will be managed as human capital by callous technocrats to profit social impact investors. Before we walk through the door of permanent digital identity, we need to realise it opens onto a maze designed to disorient, confuse, and ultimately control us.

We need for people to understand blockchain transcripts are one part of a much larger agenda tied to a world wide economic reboot. A goal of the World Economic Forum is to create a literal Internet of Bodies using 5G (soon 6G) and 'smart city' Internet of Things (IoT) sensors. Whether people are linked to blockchain via covid biometric health passports or education transcripts, the result will be the same. We are crossing the threshold not just into surveillance capitalism, but into full-on biocapitalism. Our bodies will be mined for data that will run massive futures markets in human capital investing. They need blockchain identity, and they need it brought to scale. However until that happens, there is still time to change course and fight for a humane economic system that respects all mankind and our future generations.

Blockchain will not empower the people, it will turn us into digital commodities. Secured on immutable 'trustless' ledgers, the plan is for us to be scored, sifted, and sorted in a brutish program of fierce competition and precariousness.

Make no mistake, the oligarchs value the reliability of robots over the cunning and unpredictability of humans. Universal Basic Income, and digital vouchers for education, housing and healthcare are poison apples, not solutions meant to help the masses. Blockchain is a deception, and if we take the bait, we'll end up as playable characters in an augmented reality 'game of life' cooked up by the CIA and defense contractors to benefit hedge funds. Don't fall for anything they come up with – it is never going to be for our benefit.

Health professionals ask Government not to vaccinate children under 18

TO: Boris Johnson PM, Mark Drakeford FM, Arlene Isabel Foster PC, Chris Whitty CMO, Dr Frank Atherton CMO, Dr Michael McBride CMO, Sajid Javid MP and Eluned Morgan MS
AND: JCVI, MHRA, children's commissioners and children's charities

WE are writing as professionals, medics, academics, parents, grandparents, and members of the public to express our grave concerns about suggestions to extend the covid-19 vaccination programme to children. We believe this to be a hasty step that is uncalled for under present circumstances.

You have been clear that society can reopen once the vulnerable have been offered vaccination against covid-19. This has now been achieved. All the highest risk groups have now been vaccinated and the government's own data confirms that 98% of over 60s have antibodies from either vaccination or infection. The NHS has been protected and we are no longer in a crisis situation. Whilst the very old and very frail will, sadly, always be at risk of serious illness, our children are the future. Children's lives have been put on hold for over a year already at great cost to their physical and mental wellbeing and education. We must not ask them to suffer further harm for the sake of adults.

Thankfully, the evidence shows that children and young people are minimally affected by covid-19. Vaccinating children, then, is of limited direct benefit to them but for the primary purpose of protecting adults. However, medical treatment cannot be justified if it poses a risk to the individual which is greater than the harm it protects against, and this approach would mark a significant departure from established principles of medical ethics. Kate Bingham of the Government Vaccine

by USFORTHEM.CO.UK

Task Force said last October, "we just need to vaccinate everyone at risk...there's going to be no vaccination of people under 18."

Furthermore, many of the covid-19 vaccines involve new technology that represents a radical departure from previous forms of vaccine. We should be especially cautious about using new technologies on our children.

to children from covid-19 vaccines. In particular, we refer you to the Open Letter written to the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) as reported in the Daily Telegraph on 18 May 2021, which described the plan to vaccinate children as "irresponsible, unethical and unnecessary". We urge you to re-read that letter.

It was further reported in the press on 23rd May that some teenagers and young adults who received covid-19 but by contrast, a general assumption towards vaccinating young people against covid-19 is already being created. Examples include the statement by Professor John Edmunds, a member of the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (SAGE), that "there will continue to be a major disruption in schools until we have vaccinated our children". Similarly, Mark Drakeford, First Minister of Wales, said "we might, by the autumn, be able to have young people to schooling itself as the statements above of Professor Edmunds and Mark Drakeford imply? The broader implications are disturbing.

To deploy a significant stock of vaccines on a very low risk group in the UK when many parts of the developing world are struggling to vaccinate even high risk groups is morally fragile. It has been heavily criticised by experts and has been labelled a "moral catastrophe" by World Health Organization's Executive Director Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus. However, even after vulnerable adults worldwide have been offered the vaccine, it still would be inappropriate to inject healthy children.

We are profoundly concerned that you are considering taking the UK down this road. As a society, we have striven over this last year to protect the vulnerable, but vulnerability comes in many forms and absolutely now includes children. We simply must not put children in unnecessary danger, nor in the situations described above. There is no need to rush to vaccinate children for covid-19, and there may never be any need to do so. Individual children at very high risk can already receive vaccination on compassionate grounds.

No covid-19 vaccines should be approved or licensed for use in children until the current clinical trials are complete, all adult safety data is fully published and reviewed, and potentially serious long-term side effects have been conclusively ruled out. There must be an open scientific debate, including ordinary ethical standards with a routine assessment of potential conflicts of interest, as well as due process and parliamentary scrutiny. Informed questions and criticisms should not only be welcomed but encouraged in order to prevent tragedies from occurring.

In conclusion, we join together in urging you to call a halt to the roll out of the covid-19 vaccination programme to children.

'This is a decision of generational significance. We do not believe you will ever regret a decision to be cautious when it comes to the health and welfare of the 12 million children of this nation.'

www.usforthem.co.uk

Novel vaccines fast-tracked to market have in the past caused devastating harm – we draw your attention, for example, to the many children who now live with severe nervous system injuries caused by the Swine Flu vaccine which was given to children in 2009-10 before being withdrawn. In another recent example, Dengvaxia, a new vaccine against Dengue Fever, was rolled out to children ahead of the full trial outcomes, and 19 children died of possible antibody-dependent enhancement before the vaccine was withdrawn.

We are aware that many medical doctors and researchers have warned about a variety of potential dangers vaccines have experienced heart inflammation. The aforementioned letter informs you that there have now been a number of child deaths associated with covid vaccination in the U.S., despite these vaccines only being given to children within trials and a very recent rollout to 16-17 year olds. Repeating mistakes of the past with the covid-19 vaccines would not only be devastating for the children and families affected but would risk fuelling vaccine hesitancy for other critical childhood vaccination programmes where there is a direct benefit for the child.

Fully informed consent is the bedrock of medical ethics and should underpin all vaccination programmes, returning to schools with a vaccine available to them and as a result, some of the measures we currently have in schools, such as children wearing masks, might be able to be eased". Factually misleading and emotionally manipulative teaching material has been circulated to some schools, and statements encouraging the use of peer pressure have been made by school leaders.

The vaccination of children raises broader questions which go to the very heart of the society we wish for ourselves and our children. Would vaccinated children be treated differently to unvaccinated children – for example in access to facilities within schools, or indeed in relation

by DAVID COWHAM

AFTER World War II, trials began in Nuremberg, Germany, in late 1945, including the prosecution of scientists and doctors who carried out grossly unethical medical experiments on people without their consent, most of the victims being those in Nazi concentration camps. But, contrary to common belief, these trials did NOT bring an end to the use of human beings as guinea pigs. Quite unbelievably, the UK's NHS was a hot-bed for such unethical medical experiments, even as recently as the 1960s.

Yes, you read that correctly - right here in Britain in our own National Health Service!

Back in the 60s, a British physician, Maurice H. Pappworth, exposed a long list of unethical human experiments going on in both the U.K. and America. According to a 2018 article in New Scientist, after investigating many medical journals describing unethical experiments within the NHS, Pappworth delved deeper to discover that "abuses were happening on a shocking scale, involving thousands of victims."

After writing letters to numerous medical journals about these seriously concerning issues, Pappworth found that very few journals would print his letters. No small surprise that he got little response, as some of those he wrote to were those physicians carrying out these experiments.

So, not satisfied with this, and unwilling to drop the matter, in 1967 he wrote a book in which he revealed these experiments in graphic detail, as well as revealing the names of those who carried them out. His book, 'Human Guinea Pigs: Experimentation on Man', highlighted the horrific disregard for medical ethics of some of those working in Britain's NHS, as all of these experiments - all of them barbaric - were carried out WITHOUT the patient's consent.

The experiments that Pappworth referred to mostly involved those on the vulnerable and the incarcerated, such as hospital and psychiatric patients, prisoners, and even more alarmingly, children in orphanages too. Pappworth's work on exposing the truth described doctors as "treating their patients with as much respect as lab rats, and sometimes

A dark tale of wolves in white coats performing unethical medical procedures without patient consent in the UK's National Health Service... and long after the 1945 Nuremberg trials that resulted in guilty verdicts and executions for similar crimes killing them in the process." One day you're in for routine surgery, the next you're a lab rat. 'Do no harm' was clearly the last thing on these physicians' minds. The New Scientist article mentioned above goes on to detail some of the studies that are mentioned in Pappworth's book:

In one study, doctors reported boring holes into the skulls of 18 children, had their insulin withheld so that they became comatose, after which samples of their liver and kidney were taken for analysis.

Pappworth was considered a heretic by the medical establishment for revealing such outrageous experimentation in the NHS, and a great deal of pressure was placed on him to remain silent about his findings.

people who were in hospital for conditions unrelated to the research. They then inserted tubes to measure the effect on the brain of squeezing the veins in the subjects' necks, had them breathe carbon dioxide, subjected them to painful stimuli and injected acid into their bodies.

Sick babies were popular guinea pigs. In one study, 13 "mentally deficient" babies had catheters inserted into their hearts without sedation and were then fitted with face masks to deprive them of oxygen, simply to see how their bodies would respond. The paper reported them "crying strenuously".

Doctors injected unsuspecting people with malaria parasites, meningitis bacteria, live polio virus and live cancer cells. More than 40 people with diabetes, including Sound familiar - pressure on physicians going against the 'establishment' views? Never!

Is this 'unethical' medical practice sounding in any way familiar too? Well, what we are experiencing with the international drive to get a needle into every man, woman and child alive today (and probably for all of our tomorrows too) can only be described as a massive, unethical medical experiment. Those accepting of the shot may well be giving their consent, but that doesn't mean that they are not still being used as human guinea pigs, as much information is being withheld from the majority of the public.

Anyone who has been paying attention lately will know that not one of the covid-19 vaccines have been approved by any of the world's governing medical bodies, including America's Federal Drug Administration (FDA) and the UK's Medicines and Healthcare Regulatory Authority (MHRA).

They are being used under 'Emergency Use Authorisation' only, meaning that they have NOT been properly tested, so they cannot possibly be claimed as being either safe or effective. They can only truthfully be described as 'experimental'.

Therefore, and quite obviously, anyone who has had one or more is a participant in the largest medical experiment in the history of mankind. We may not be having our skulls drilled into (well, not physically anyway), and nor are catheters going into our children's hearts, but nonetheless, the world is now awash with millions of walking, talking, human guinea pigs, many of whom will include children soon too - is the scandal-tainted World Health Organisation (WHO), the same WHO featured in a revealing 2018 documentary called 'trustWHO'. This film is a must-watch, exposing their clandestine ways, financial conflicts of interest, and unethical practices. The WHO claim that CV-19 vaccines are safe. So, it stands as a cold-hard fact that they are lying, unless the millions who claim injury or loss of life of close ones are all lying.

The WHO claim that CV-19 vaccines only protect you against severe symptoms. They do NOT claim - and they never have - that you will be immune from infection, or that you will not spread the disease after your jabs. So, with worldwide survival rates without a vaccine being 99.9%+, and the vaccine being of little or no use to us in terms of the protection of human health, thus springs to mind the most obvious of all questions, "Why have one?"

According to the WHO, viruses have been a daily presence in our lives since time began, yet a safe - also known as 'harmless' - vaccine has never been brought to market for any one of them. During the 1976 Swine Flu pandemic vaccines were given to tens of millions of people, then swiftly taken off the market within a matter of weeks after only a relatively small number of vaccine-related deaths. Yet, here we are in 2021, with CV-19 vaccines already having been linked to the deaths of thousands upon thousands, as well as many more debilitating injuries and unpleasant side-effects, and the drive to inject yet more is higher than ever.

Quite incredibly, vaccines are still being pushed hard by the WHO and the world's political and healthcare 'authority' figures. They are being sold to us as the only way out of our current situation by a long list of middle-men: Johnson, Biden, Macron, Merkel, Modi, Netanyahu, Fauci, Gates, Whitty, Hancock, and so on. I often say that you couldn't make this up, yet, seemingly, that is exactly what they have done.

Don't be a guinea pig. Be human.

It's tough to get your hands on a copy of Pappworth's book, and when you do find one it costs around £75. However, Pappworth's daughter, Joanna Seldon, wrote a book in 2017 about her father's life called 'The Whistle-Blower: One Man's Fight Against The Medical Establishment'. It's available for under £15.

Black Lives Matter leader quits

A BLACK Lives Matter chapter founder in Minnesota has resigned, claiming that the organisation isn't concerned about helping black communities or helping improve the education quality in Minneapolis, according to a video published in the middle of June.

Rashard Turner, the founder of a Black Lives Matter chapter in neighbouring St. Paul, said he started the branch in 2015 but became disillusioned roughly a year after becoming "an insider" within the far left organisation, according to a video released by TakeCharge - a group that rejects various provisions promoted by Black Lives Matter, including critical race theory-linked claims that the United States is inherently racist.

by JACK PHILLIPS

"After a year on the inside, I learned they had little concern for rebuilding black families, and they cared even less about improving the quality of education for students in Minneapolis," Turner said in the video.

"That was made clear when they publicly denounced charter schools alongside the teachers' union. I was an insider in Black Lives Matter, and I learned the ugly truth. The moratorium on charter schools does not support rebuilding the black family. But it does create barriers to a better education for black children. I resigned from Black Lives Matter after a year and a half. But I didn't quit working to improve black lives and access to a great education."

Representatives for Black Lives Matter didn't respond to a request for comment by press time.

Approximately a year after George Floyd's death in Minneapolis, support for the group has plummeted in the United States, according to a recent poll from Morning Consult. Only 48 percent hold favorable views about the organisation, down from 61 percent last May.

A USA Today survey found that 36 percent of Americans now would describe Floyd's death as a murder, down from 60 percent last summer.

A poll in May conducted by the newspaper revealed that the Black Lives Matter call to 'defund the police' has even less support, with only 18 percent of respondents supporting it.

It comes amid recent controversies surrounding Patrisse Cullors, a co-founder of the organisation who resigned after a series of reports about her real estate portfolio and finances. Following the reports' publication last month, Cullors asserted that she didn't misuse any donations to Black Lives Matter, despite now owning properties worth over $3 million.

In a statement last week, Cullors - a self-described "trained Marxist" - said, "With smart, experienced, and committed people supporting the organisation during this transition, I know that BLMGNF is in good hands ... the foundation's agenda remains the same - eradicate white supremacy and build life-affirming institutions."

Cullors told The Associated Press that her departure was planned more than a year in advance and wasn't related to the reports about her finances and her multiple homes, claiming they "were right-wing attacks" meant to defame her character.

Reporter who broke key Clinton story dead of apparent suicide

THE body of a Birmingham, Alabama journalist who broke the story about the controversial 2016 tarmac meeting in Phoenix between former President Bill Clinton and then-Attorney General Loretta Lynch was found on Saturday morning of an 'apparent suicide,' according to AL.com.

Veteran TV newsman and former University of Alabama football player Christopher Sign died Saturday morning in an apparent suicide, according to police.

At 8:13 a.m. Saturday, the Hoover 911 center received a call of a person down at a residence on Scout Trace. Hoover police and fire personnel arrived to find the 45-year-old Sign dead.

Hoover police Lt. Keith Czeskleba said the death is being investigated as a suicide but gave no more details.

The tarmac bombshell, which gave the appearance that Bill Clinton was secretly pleading his wife's email case after then-FBI James Comey launched a new investigation, is thought to have contributed to Hillary Clinton's loss in 2016.

Sign, meanwhile, had complained last year of receiving 'significant' death threats, having his credit cards hacked, and having to create code-words to use with his children in a clear indication he viewed the threats as serious with regards to his family.

by TYLER DURDEN & CAROL ROBINSON

Sign, an Emmy-award winning reporter, made national headlines over the June 27, 2016 tarmac meeting at Phoenix Sky Harbor Airport amid the FBI's investigation into Hillary Clinton's use of an unauthorised server at home whilst serving as Obama's Secretary of State. The meeting between Clinton and Lynch occurred days before Comey announced that the bureau would not press charges against Hillary - after the agency changed internal language describing Clinton's conduct from "gross negligence" to "extremely careless."

"Gross negligence" is a legal term of art in criminal law often associated with recklessness. According to Black's Law Dictionary, gross negligence is a severe degree of negligence taken as reckless disregard, and "Blatant indifference to one's legal duty, other's safety, or their rights. 'Extremely careless,' on the other hand, is not a legal term of art.

In addition to the "gross negligence" softening to "extremely careless" edit (performed by disgraced FBI agent Peter Strzok), the FBI removed a key justification for elevating Clinton's actions to the standard of "gross negligence" - that being the "sheer volume" of classified material on Clinton's server. In the original draft, the "sheer volume" of material "supports an inference that the participants were grossly negligent in their handling of that information."

Also removed from Comey's statement were all references to the Intelligence Community's involvement in investigating Clinton's private email server, as well as changing the language to downgrade the probability that Clinton's server was hacked by hostile actors, changing their language from "reasonably likely" to "possible" - an edit which eliminated yet another justification for the phrase "Gross negligence." To put it another way, "reasonably likely" means the probability of a hack due to Clinton's negligence is above 50 percent, whereas the hack simply being "possible" is any probability above zero.

In short, Bill Clinton's exposed clandestine tarmac meeting appears to have had quite the effect on his wife's investigation, despite the fact that she still lost. And now the respected journalist who broke the story is dead.

ABC 33/40 in 2017 announced Sign was returning to Birmingham from Phoenix as the evening anchor, replacing Dave Baird after he retired.

Sign, who grew up near Dallas, previously worked as a reporter for ABC 33/40 from 2000 to 2005, where he covered the 2001 Brookwood mine disaster and hurricanes Charlie, Frances and Ivan.

While a reporter and morning anchor at ABC affiliate KNXV-TV in Phoenix, Sign broke the story of the June 2016 secret tarmac meeting between former President Bill Clinton and then-Attorney General Loretta Lynch.

"Our deepest sympathy is shared with Christopher's loving family and close friends. We have lost a revered colleague who's indelible imprint will serve forever as a hallmark of decency, honesty and journalist integrity. We can only hope to carry on his legacy. May his memory be for blessing," said ABC 33/40 Vice President and General Manager Eric Land in a statement.

Sign wrote a book about his experience called 'Secret on the Tarmac' in which he tells his full story.

Sign also won a 2014 Emmy Award for breaking news for his coverage of the shooting of two Phoenix police officers, as well as an Edward R. Murrow Award for spot news, for his coverage of the search for the "Baseline Killer" and "Serial Shooter" who terrorised Phoenix in the summer of 2016.

He attended the University of Alabama in the 1990s and spent four years as an offensive lineman for the Crimson Tide under former coach Gene Stallings.

While at Alabama, he met his wife, Laura, an All-SEC volleyball player. He leaves three sons.

Lebanon in the grip of hyperinflation

A NEW downward turn means that the Lebanese pound has lost more than 90 percent of its value on the informal market since October 2019. The World Bank has called it one of the worst financial crunches worldwide since the mid-19th century. Lebanon's currency hit a new low against the dollar on the black market Monday. The pound, officially at 1,507 to the US dollar since 1997, was selling for 15,400 to 15,500 on the black market, several money changers stated.

After hovering around 15,000 to the dollar in mid-March, the unofficial exchange rate dropped to between 12,000 and 13,000 later that month before soaring back up in recent days. The last time the pound hit a low of 15,000 in March protesters took to the streets across Lebanon for over a week, blocking roads by burning tires.

Lebanon has been without a fully-functioning government for ten months since the last one stepped down after a deadly port explosion in Beirut last summer. Politicians were unable to form a new cabinet even as foreign currency cash reserves plummeted, causing fuel, electricity and medicine shortages.

According to thearabweekly.com, the country, where more than half the population now lives in poverty, is in desperate need of financial aid but the international community has made any such assistance conditional on the formation of a new government to launch sweeping reforms.

Largely locked out of their dollar deposit accounts since late 2019 when the Lebanese pound crashed and the banking system buckled amid widespread political protests, some savers see investments in export-focused companies as a way to access hard currency and get something for their "lollars", the nickname for U.S. dollar-denominated deposits "trapped" in Lebanon's banks.

Alcohol exporters, including craft brewers and gin merchants, are a popular choice.

"If you invest with me today trapped dollars I'll give it back to you in fresh dollars," said Kamal Fayad, chief executive of 961 Beer, a Lebanese beer exporter.

Under informal capital controls, depositors can still write cheques on their U.S. dollar-denominated accounts but those cheques cannot be used abroad and if sold at local exchanges they lose at least 75% of their value.

The steep discount reflects the predicament of having dollars parked at Lebanese banks. Starved

by DAVIDE BARBUSCIA, FRESHPLAZA.COM and

of dollar funding, the banks limit customers' access to their funds and currently pay out at a rate of 3,900 Lebanese pounds to the greenback, around a quarter of the value of dollars on the black market.

Fayad said he was in talks with investors to raise the equivalent of over $1 million which would include between $3 million to $4 million lollars.

"It's really political and financial surrealism," said Toufic Gaspard, an economist who has worked as an adviser at the International Monetary Fund and as an adviser to a former finance minister.

"If a patient refuses to take any medications for 20 months, what do we expect will happen? Of course the health of the patient will deteriorate. This is exactly what we are witnessing in Lebanon, the dwindling of reserves, more depreciation of the currency and more shortages of basic commodities," he said.

Import shortages are now impacting the daily life of ordinary Lebanese. Long queues for fuel recently led to clashes in north Lebanon, while pharmacies went on a two-day strike last week as medicines ran out.

Many importers are facing delays in subsidy payments from the central bank, straining cash flows, said Hani Bohsali, head of the Syndicate of Importers of Foodstuffs, Consumer Products and Drinks.

"From just speaking to traders, I can tell you that there are $50 million to $100 million of unpaid since the government defaulted and branches, barricaded with metal plates, have become a target for protests. The financial sector, the state's biggest creditor, is estimated to have losses in excess of $80 billion, according to estimates by the outgoing government last year, a figure that dwarfs Lebanon's annual economic output of around $50 billion. Fearing for their savings, many Lebanese have tried to move their money out of banks by repaying individual and company debt.

An executive at a Beirut-based financial services firm, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he had seen a spike in investor demand to finance exporters and manufacturers, resulting in some of those companies closing their bank credit facilities. Andre Malak of The Three Brothers, a Lebanese gin producer, has seen a 30% jump in outside investment since the crisis. "We started seeing an increase in interest since the beginning of the recession when people wanted to remove their money from the bank and put it in free space", he said.

Mike Azar, a Beirut-based financial adviser, said Lebanon's financial system had seen a deleveraging of more than $20 billion since October 2019 and the use of trapped dollars to repay outstanding debt contributed further to devaluing the currency, as selling cheques in exchange for U.S. dollars was lifting demand for an already dwindling supply.

The central bank, meanwhile, is planning to allow depositors to withdraw some of their trapped dollars through a new scheme with a limit of $800 per month, half of it in dollars and the rest in Lebanese pounds at a government rate of around 12,000 to the U.S. dollar.

Some observers believe that the increase in the money supply via the withdrawal of Lebanese pounds against foreign currencies at the exchange rate of the Sayrafa electronic platform of the Banque du Liban would largely explain the deterioration in the value of the local currency, in addition to the political crisis which continues while awaiting the Prime Minister designate Saad Hariri to recuse himself due to increasingly critical disputes with the Presidency of the Republic.

As a reminder, the establishment of a new government is necessary for the relaunch of negotiations with the IMF and the implementation of economic, monetary and fiscal reforms deemed essential for the release of international aid, while the crisis that Lebanon is going through is worsening with a poverty rate that could now reach more than 75% of the population.

"Investors prefer to take the risk on me rather than keep money in the bank, at least I'm doing something good for the industry. I'm safer today to them than a bank," he said.

The willingness to take the financial hit reflects despair over Lebanon's path out of crisis, which has been blocked by political in-fighting compounded by a devastating unexplained explosion at the capital's port last year.

Economic meltdown has driven half the population of 6 million into poverty, wiped out savings and slashed consumer purchasing power.

International donors have said they will only help if major reforms are implemented to fight widespread corruption but a near year-long standoff over the make-up of a new government means they are nowhere near being introduced.

The offices of the finance minister and the economy minister did not respond to a request for comment.

Lebanon depends on imports and for years the central bank helped finance the trade deficit by offering high interest rates on dollar deposits at commercial banks. The banks passed these rates on to clients, attracting a flood of deposits and hefty profits for a banking system with assets that swelled to as much as 167% of the country's economic output in 2015.

The system imploded when the government defaulted on its debt last year. Foreign reserves at the central bank dropped from over $30 billion prior to the crisis to about $15 billion in March, and an expensive subsidy programme for imports is pushing usable reserves to the point of exhaustion.

invoices for food imports. The goods have come, they have been sold, but they have not been covered by the central bank," he said.

He said such delays had become a real threat as importers did not know when they would be paid and could not rely on banks to finance imports.

"You need to finance your purchases from your own financial strength, using money from your own personal accounts, or fresh dollars you take from foreign accounts," he said.

The central bank did not respond to a request for comment.

The government is looking to reform the subsidy system but it has stopped short of ending it until an alternative cash subsidy system is approved by parliament.

GREEN ENERGY

IS A SCAM

We've all heard of being green, sustainable and trying to 'save the planet', but how much of what we are repeatedly told by giant corporations, advertisers, governments and world organisations is actually true and helping to create a better environment for all? We decided to take a closer look and what we found, if you really are in favour of a cleaner, better world for everyone to live in, should shock you as it did us.

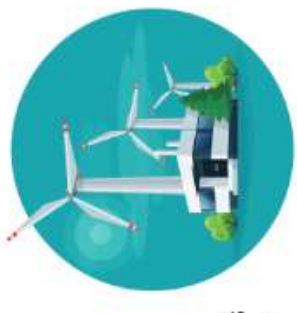

solar panels

While being medium-destructive to build and operate, due to the rare earth minerals needed to manufacture and then the oil needed to transport them all over the world, no one has yet figured out how to safely dispose of 50 million tons of these that are going to start coming offline over the next few years. They also don't work at night, or very well in the winter or when it's cloudy. Whilst being useful on a small, individual basis, for mass energy provision they are sorely lacking: Despite spending 150 billion euros, Germany, with its politically correct 'Energiewende' green energy transformation, is only providing 13% of its energy needs through renewables, and costs have more than doubled for the average household since 2000.

Hydroelectric dominates the international renewable energy market. Building and operating a hydroelectric reservoir can lead to several harmful impacts on the environment. The dams constructed for harnessing hydropower tend to greatly influence the flow of rivers, which can alter ecosystems and negatively impact wildlife and people. The most negative impact of this giant among green energy is the flooding of an area. When the water stored within the dam is released all at once, it can cause the river downstream to suddenly flood. This can result in the destruction of agricultural land, forests, wildlife, and homes. For example, the Dhauliganga hydroelectric station in India, in 2013, led to unprecedented flash floods causing the complete submergence of the power house. Also leave areas subject to drought, wind turbines

If you are still unaware these world uniform design turbines (was there a vote?) kill millions of birds, bats and wildlife every year then you may want to ask why you didn't know that. They also require conventional fuels and materials to construct, and of course much green countryside has been devastated to make way for the monstrosities, plus for the roads to service them. Videos of their catching fire and self-destructing also abound on the internet. The EPA notes that wind turbines are the least energy-producing and the most physically difficult renewable energy waste stream to address.

The land use required to grow even these fast-growing plants dwarfs the land use of other power sources. This has significant ecological implications. As measured by species lost per kilowatt-hour generated, we found that the ecological damages of biomass are comparable to that of coal and gas. Threatening biodiversity as natural habitats are destroyed for so-called environmentally-friendly energy production. Further, any land that is used for growing fuel cannot also be used for growing food. Is this part of the plan to keep raising food prices?

smart meters

as threatens the massive Lake Oroville Plant in California, for example.

electric vehicles

No matter where the electricity is coming from to power your shiny Tesla, soon to be one of hundreds on the market as they raise the price of oil to make switching 'more economical' for some, it is not clean, green and 'renewable' in any way. EV's have a half-ton unrecyclable battery inside them, and no one's figured out how they're going to dispose of the millions of those either (once the tiny amounts of rare earths have been recovered for which billions of tons of earth was displaced). If they were powered directly from the sun then EV's would be a winner, but the fact they aren't able to be powered by a body made of solar material and that their fuel essentially comes from conventional fuels doesn't make them any kind of revolution at all, just another marketing gimmick that plays on the feeling good about doing some good to help the environment, which they're really not.

subsidies

When even the big energy companies like BP, Shell & Exxon are investing and most car makers are 'switching over' - you know there has to be a play. The traditional energy companies won't be any worse off because of the 'green' agenda/revolution. On the contrary, they will continue to profit from extracting natural oil out of the ground for pennies and charging us ever more for it, reducing and controlling the population in yet another way, as per their stated agenda many times over.

You would never put all of your nest eggs in one place, lest the one basket should fall. What if there is a power failure, or electricity becomes prohibitively expensive? The notorious Georgia Guidestones reads 'MAINTAIN' humanity at 500 million, and control over the world's energy needs is a very smart way to do that (pun intended). We used to have gas cookers, coal fires, wood stoves and now new homes will be banned from having gas central heating installed from 2025. Have a good think about it - what would you no longer be able to do in your home (and vehicle) if you had no electric for whatever reason: cook, heat, light, charge batteries for phones and other electrical devices, charge cars, etc. Remember, nothing that mega-corporations, governments and NGO's push for is meant to benefit the common people. It is meant to enslave us, eventually.

The ability to remotely control and even switch off your household electricity supply is now available to those who would lock you down for the flu, should you have one of these installed. Couples in Texas recently reported having their A/C adjusted so they woke up sweating and dehydrated. The below link (you can always search) lists a number of reasons you should have a 2-way smart meter taken out and replaced with a 1-way old type meter asap, including higher bills, fires, and lack of privacy: <https://www.activistpost.com/2021/06/smart-meters-getting-poor-reviews-in-u-k-after-aggressive-rollout.html>

taxes and regulation

Only large corporations will be able to afford to comply with the green 'planet-saving' regulations and trade carbon credits etc. so that small independently-owned businesses will be forced to close and the continued corporatisation of the entire world will continue, meaning more wealth in the hands of the uber-rich overlords and less for ordinary people, with fewer choices. After the devastation of unnecessary lockdowns, it's another attack by those who want monopolies and cartels over all resources, products and services, for total control over Earth.

Everything connected up to the internet - the internet of things, now the WEF are talking about 'the internet of bodies' - meaning humans directly connected to the virtual world. Would you want anyone to be able to hack into your fridge, your children's monitor, your private conversations? All of those 'smart' devices connected to the internet remove any privacy, and if you're not private then you're no longer an individual - you belong to the collective. It's almost as if we're being pushed to eschew the natural world in favour of an artificial, digital, virtual life which can of course be monitored, tracked, controlled and censored, not to mention using electricity for absolutely everything can't possibly be the route to conservation.

Iranian hardliner elected

EBRAHIM Raisi, a hardline judge who is under U.S. sanctions for human rights abuses, secured victory as expected on June 19 in Iran's presidential election, in a contest marked by voter apathy over economic hardships and political restrictions.

With all 28.9 million ballots counted, Raisi was elected with a tally of 17.9 million, Interior Minister Abdolreza Rahmani Fazli said on state TV.

Turnout in the June 18 four-man race was a record low of around 48.8 percent, and there were 3.7 million invalid ballots that were likely to have been mostly protest votes.

Appointed by Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei to the high-profile job of judiciary chief in 2019, Raisi was placed under U.S. sanctions a few months later over human rights violations.

Those included the role that human rights groups say Raisi played in the executions of thousands of political prisoners in 1988 and in the violent suppression of unrest in 2009.

Seen by analysts and insiders as representing the security establishment at its most fearsome, Raisi, 60, had been widely tipped to win the contest, thanks to Khamenei's endorsement.

Chinese city proposes licenses for self-driving vehicles

THE southern boomtown of Shenzhen is preparing to issue special license plates for self-driving vehicles, in a first for China that will allow the vehicles to run legally on public roads and promote the industry's development.

The regulation on 'intelligent and connected vehicles (ICVs)' would help promote commercialisation of self-driving vehicles, such as their use as taxis, instead of being limited to tests, industry experts said. So far, ICVs are technically not legal because national laws stipulate that vehicles must be driven by a human driver.

The proposed regulation will be sent for approval by the Standing Committee of Shenzhen People's Congress at the end of June.

If the regulation passes, the "Shenzhen government will issue a list of ICVs that can be sold, driven on roads and used for transportation business," the report says.

Skull & Crossbones sign given to unvaccinated in rural India

POLICE in rural India have made some citizens who have not been injected with experimental genetic drugs wear signs with a skull and crossbones, the universal symbol for danger, stoking anger in a country where the shots are in short supply.

Officers in the Niwari district of central Madhya Pradesh state said they introduced the policy to encourage more vaccinations.

"Watching the low vaccination rate in our district we decided to honour the people who got vaccinated, but then we also found a large number of people who were not vaccinated," Santosh Patel, a sub-divisional police officer posted.

Those who were vaccinated were given a sign with the colours of the Indian flag reading "I am a nationalist."

Those who were not vaccinated were given a skull and crossbones sign saying "Do not come near me, I am not vaccinated. Please stay away from me," according to Patel and video footage from the district. Some people were seen wearing the signs taped to their chest.

The policy has provoked anger online, with social media users calling it an "insult" and "stigmatising".

Around 14% of residents in Madhya Pradesh have had one spike protein injection, with rates in rural areas like Niwari among the lowest anywhere in the country.

Swiss vote against green taxes but to keep pesticides

'THE best argument against democracy is five minutes with the average voter' Winston Churchill once quipped, and with Switzerland having the only direct democracy system in the world, we should look to them to how things go when the people get to decide on all major issues.

There were 3 votes recently - 2 for raising taxes on fuel and airline tickets, and 1 to ban pesticides and only give water subsidies to farmers who refuse to use chemicals - and all three were rejected by the electorate.

With around two-thirds of millennials and 'zoomers' rejecting the green policies, it shows that virtue signalling is all very well, but nobody actually wants to pay even more for their products and services when it comes down to it.

The 3rd vote to outlaw artificial pesticides, and another to improve drinking water by giving subsidies only to farmers who eschew chemicals were both voted down by 61%.

Campaigners simply have to gather 100,000 signatures to ensure a nationwide vote on anything.

Canadian political leader arrested for attending anti-lockdown protest

MAXIME Bernier, the leader of the People's Party of Canada (PPC), was arrested last Friday after speaking at an anti-lockdown protest in St-Pierre-Jolys, Manitoba. He was arrested for violating provincial health orders, which prohibit indoor and outdoor gatherings on both public and private property and mandate 14 days of self-isolation for anyone entering the province.

The arrest was hardly a surprise. Before his trip, he received a letter from the Manitoba Department of Health informing him that attending the planned rallies would be illegal. He also received two citations at a different rally earlier that day, and the officer issuing the ticket warned him that he could be arrested if he continued attending rallies.

Undeterred, Bernier continued with his plans. Upon arriving in St-Pierre-Jolys, a town of about 1,000, Bernier addressed those who had gathered to hear him speak. There were less than a dozen people in attendance. The whole event was outdoors and physically distanced.

Shortly after the protest, his truck was pulled over and he was arrested on the spot. "Do you have anything on you that's going to hurt me?" the arresting officer asks.

"Only my words. Only my philosophy. Only what I believe in," Bernier replied.

Florida pardons all covid fines and arrests

FLORIDA Gov. Ron DeSantis on Wednesday announced that all Floridians who were arrested or fined for violating mask mandates or social distancing requirements will be pardoned.

In a 3-1 vote, the four-member Board of Executive Clemency approved the Republican governor's decision to officially pardon those who were arrested or fined for violating local government orders.

"This action is necessary so that we can recover, have a good transition to normal operations, and also just a recognition that a lot of

by ISABEL VAN BRUGEN

this stuff was way, way overboard," DeSantis said of the move.

DeSantis said the pardon applies to civil and criminal penalties handed to individuals or businesses "punished for breaking unscientific, unnecessary directives".

Voting to deny the pardons was Democrat Nikki Fried, who is currently State Agriculture Commissioner and is running to unseat DeSantis next year.

"Our local governments stepped up to protect the people of our state. They did what was best for the interests of their communities," Fried said.

It isn't clear how many Floridians will be pardoned as a result of the state clemency board's decision. DeSantis' office did not immediately respond to a request for comment by The Epoch Times.

The decision to pardon Floridians who violated local government orders follows an executive order issued by the governor on May 3 that suspends all local pandemic emergency mandates effective July 1.

DeSantis signed Senate Bill 2006 last month, passed by Florida state lawmakers in April, granting the governor the ability to override local emergency orders. The bill also includes a ban on vaccine passports that were to levy fines of $5,000 per violation.

The Republican governor at the time described his executive orders as the "evidence-based thing to do," adding that proponents of lockdowns "really are saying you don't believe in the vaccines, you don't believe in the data, you don't believe in the science." He added: "We've embraced the science on it."

The order suspending local emergency mandates only affects governments, not businesses.

In announcing the official pardons, DeSantis highlighted a case which saw the arrest of Mike Carnevale, a Broward County gym owner who refused to enforce mask orders. DeSantis granted clemency to him and his wife.

"Floridians like Mike and Jillian Carnevale should have never faced criminal charges for not requiring mask in their businesses," the governor said. "Today, we took action in Florida to reject the overreach of local authorities through unnecessary and unscientific mask mandates."

He added: "No business should face economic ruin and be punished for alleged violations of local orders that are unreasonably restrictive of rights and liberties."

“Spike protein a toxin and pathogenic” - Canadian university professor

by CELESTE McGOVERN

NEW research shows that the coronavirus spike protein from covid-19 vaccination unexpectedly enters the bloodstream, which is a plausible explanation for the millions of reported side-effects from blood clots and heart disease, to brain damage and reproductive issues, a Canadian cancer vaccine researcher said last week.

“We made a big mistake. We didn’t realize it until now,” said Byram Bridle, a viral immunologist and associate professor at University of Guelph, Ontario, in an interview with Alex Pierson, in which he warned listeners that his message was “scary.”

“We thought the spike protein was a great target antigen, we never knew the spike protein itself was a toxin and was a pathogenic protein. So by vaccinating people we are inadvertently inoculating them with a toxin,” Bridle said.

Bridle, a vaccine researcher who was awarded a $230,000 government grant in 2020 for research on covid vaccine development, said that he and a group of international scientists filed a request for information from the Japanese regulatory agency to get access to what’s called the ‘biodistribution study.’

“It’s the first time ever scientists have been privy to seeing where these messenger RNA [mRNA] vaccines go after injection,” said Bridle. “Is it a safe assumption that it stays in the shoulder muscle? The short answer is: absolutely not. It’s very disconcerting.”

Vaccine researchers had assumed that novel mRNA covid vaccines would behave like ‘traditional’ vaccines and the spike protein — responsible for infection and its most severe symptoms — would remain mostly in the vaccination site at the shoulder muscle. Instead, the Japanese data showed that the infamous spike protein of the coronavirus gets into the blood where it circulates for several days and then accumulates in organs and tissues including the spleen, bone marrow, the liver, adrenal glands, and in ‘quite high concentrations’ in the ovaries.

“We have known for a long time that the spike protein is a pathogenic protein. It is a toxin. It can cause damage in our body if it gets into circulation,” Bridle said.

The SARS-CoV-2 spike protein is what allows it to infect human cells. Vaccine manufacturers chose to target the unique protein, making cells in the vaccinated person manufacture the protein which would then, in theory, evoke an immune response to the protein, preventing it from infecting cells.

A large number of studies has shown that the most severe effects of SARS-CoV-2, the virus that allegedly causes covid-19, such as blood clotting and bleeding, are due to the effects of which detected SARS-CoV-2 protein in the blood plasma of 11 of 13 young healthcare workers that had received Moderna’s covid-19 vaccine, including three with detectable levels of spike protein. A ‘subunit’ protein called S1, part of the spike protein, was also detected. Spike protein was detected an average of 15 days after the first injection. One patient had spike protein detectable on day 29, one day after an injection, delivered to the spleen and the glands, including the ovaries and the adrenal glands. The released spike protein is being shed into the medium and then eventually reaches the bloodstream causing systemic damage. ACE2 receptors are common in the heart and brain, and this is how the spike protein causes cardiovascular and cognitive problems,” Seneff said.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recently assessed in the safety trials.”

While Whelan did not dispute the value of a coronavirus vaccine that worked to stop transmission of the disease (which no covid vaccine in circulation has been demonstrated to do), he said, “it would be vastly worse if hundreds of millions of people were to suffer long-lasting or even permanent damage to their brain or heart microvasculature as a result of failing to appreciate in the short-term an unintended effect of full-length spike protein-based vaccines on other organs.”

Bridle said the discovery of vaccine-induced spike protein in blood circulation would have implications for blood donation programs. “We don’t want transfer of these pathogenic spike proteins to fragile patients who are being transfused with that blood,” he said.

The vaccine scientist also said the findings suggested that nursing babies whose mothers had been vaccinated were at risk of getting covid spike proteins from her breast milk.

Bridle said that “any proteins in the blood will get concentrated in breast milk,” and “we have found evidence of suckling infants experiencing bleeding disorders in the gastrointestinal tract” in VAERS.

Given the small number of young research subjects in Pfizer’s vaccine trials and the limited duration of clinical trials, the Canadian Covid Care Alliance (CCCA) — a group of independent Canadian doctors, scientists, and professionals whose declared aim is “to provide top quality, evidence-based information about covid-19, intent on reducing hospitalizations and saving more lives,” said questions about the spike protein and another vaccine protein must be answered before children and teens are vaccinated, including whether the vaccine spike protein crosses the blood-brain barrier, whether the vaccine spike protein interferes with semen production or ovulation, and whether the vaccine spike protein crosses the placenta and impacts a developing baby or is in breast milk.

the spike protein of the virus itself

What has been discovered by the scientific community is the spike protein on its own is almost entirely responsible for the damage to the cardiovascular system, if it gets into circulation,” Bridle told listeners.

Lab animals injected with purified spike protein into their bloodstream developed cardiovascular problems, and the spike protein was also demonstrated to cross the blood brain barrier and cause damage to the brain.

A grave mistake, according to Bridle, was the belief that the spike protein would not escape into the blood circulation. “Now, we have clear-cut evidence that the vaccines that make the cells in our deltoid muscles manufacture this protein — that the vaccine itself, plus the protein — gets into blood circulation,” he said.

Bridle cited the recent study which disappeared two days later.

Once in circulation, the spike protein can attach to specific ACE2 receptors that are on blood platelets and the cells that line blood vessels. “When that happens it can do one of two things: it can either cause platelets to clump, and that can lead to clotting. That’s exactly why we’ve been seeing clotting disorders associated with these vaccines. It can also lead to bleeding,” Bridle also said the spike protein in circulation would explain recently reported heart problems in youths who had received the shots.

“The results of this leaked Pfizer study tracing the biodistribution of the vaccine mRNA are not surprising, but the implications are terrifying,” Stephanie Seneff, a senior research scientist at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, told LifeSiteNews. “It is now clear that vaccine content is being announced it was studying reports of “mild” heart conditions following covid-19 vaccination, and last week 18 teenagers in the state of Connecticut alone were hospitalised for heart problems that developed shortly after they had covid-19 vaccines.

AstraZeneca’s vaccine was halted in a number of countries and is no longer recommended for younger people because of its link to life-threatening and fatal blood clots, but mRNA covid vaccines have been linked to hundreds of reports of blood clotting events as well.

Pediatric rheumatologist J. Patrick Whelan had warned a vaccine advisory committee of the Food and Drug Administration of the potential for the spike protein in covid vaccines to cause microvascular damage causing damage to the liver, heart, and brain in “ways that were not

Only murderers and lunatics support covid jabs for children

Governments, advisors and the media have fed us an unrelenting diet of lies since the covid fraud started early in 2021

BUT recently the lies have grown bolder and more outrageous.

The latest deceit is to claim that the covid 19 jabs should be given to children – because it is safe and effective.

There's a good deal of 'maybe we will, maybe we won't' going on. But there's been official talk that children who aren't jabbed won't be allowed to go to school.

I've been warning about the particular problems of the covid 19 jabs since 2020 but it is now clear that the experimental jabbing programme should be halted.

Children are going to be given an experimental injection that doesn't do what people believe it does, to protect them from a disease which is nothing more than the rebranded flu. Many children will die and many will suffer serious, life-changing side effects. There will be hugely tragic consequences – including possible infertility and much worse.

Any parent who allows their child to be vaccinated against covid 19 should be arrested for child abuse.

Any doctor or nurse who jabs a child with one of the experimental covid jabs should be arrested for assault and child abuse and imprisoned.

Every teacher pushing the jabs for children, and every doctor or nurse prepared to give them should be asked if they know these simple facts:

1. Here is what the NHS in the UK says about the covid 19 jab: 'We do not yet know whether it will stop you from catching and passing on the virus.'
2. The CDC in the US reported early on that the covid 19 injections caused a huge variety – and number – of dangerous side effects. I listed these back in 2020. (They're on

by Dr VERNON COLEMAN

www.vernoncoleman.org).

3. Although the injection is usually given into a shoulder muscle it can, and invariably will, enter the blood stream. If you have a bruise after a jab then that's proof of bleeding. Rubbing the site after this vaccine could, in my view, speed up the rate at which the toxin enters the blood. Many of those giving the jabs know little or nothing about the substance they're injecting. Some vaccinators undoubtedly put the tip of the needle into a small blood vessel thereby squirting the material directly into the circulatory system. Is it possible that the people suffering the most immediate, dramatic consequences are those in whom this has happened? How many vaccinators check that the needle tip isn't in a blood vessel? How many vaccinators realise that these jabs are like no other they have ever given? (I've been writing about vaccines and vaccination for over half a century and these are very different weapons.)
4. The spike protein from these jabs is a toxin which can spread throughout the body, entering the spleen, liver, bone marrow and ovaries. It is the fact that the spike protein affects the platelets which can cause clotting, bleeding, heart problems and neurological problems.
5. Breast milk is affected by this toxic jab – and the antibodies in breast milk can cause bleeding in infants.
6. The BBC official policy is to deny its viewers and listeners information which questions the value of vaccination. The BBC has financial links to vaccine manufacturers.
7. Up until the end of May 2021, government figures show these jabs had been responsible for 4,406 deaths in the US and 1,213 deaths in the UK. Less than 1 in 100 adverse events in the US is reported. In the UK there had also been 859,481 total adverse reactions. With the Astra Zeneca vaccine alone 192 people had gone blind.
8. Over half of GPs in the UK said they would not have the vaccine. In the UK the Government has admitted that despite putting NHS staff under pressure at least 20% have refused to be jabbed.

9. Perfectly healthy children are probably no more at risk of dying of covid 19 than they are of being killed by lightning. No previously healthy child under the age of 15 has died of covid 19 in the UK. Most children have hardly any symptoms.

Parents who want grandchildren should not allow their children to be given these jabs.

10. Claims for so-called 'long covid' have been wildly exaggerated. There is little or no evidence showing that it is more of a risk than the usual post viral fatigue syndrome which commonly follows the flu. Oddly enough the symptoms of so-called long covid are exactly the same as the problems caused by the jabs. What a coincidence.
11. Even if they get it children don't transmit covid 19 as readily as adults. Teachers are less at risk of covid 19 than other working age adults.
12. The latest figures from the MHRA in the UK show that in the UK the side effects involved include serious neurological problems, heart attacks, strokes, blindness and many other serious disorders. And covid 19 has a mortality rate which is much the same as that for the ordinary flu.
13. The WHO agrees with the NHS that the covid jabs don't stop people getting covid 19 or passing it on.

14. In my view at least no one who has been jabbed should be allowed to give blood for transfusion. In my professional view, the blood transfusion stock has already been contaminated.
15. No one knows whether the covid 19 jab will interact dangerously with the many other vaccinations given to children.
16. There has been no testing to find out if the covid 19 jab might interact dangerously with other prescription drugs or over-the-counter drugs.
17. At least 66 fully tested and approved vaccines have been withdrawn and discontinued in the US for safety reasons.
18. Governments around the world have paid out billions of dollars in compensation to patients who have been severely injured by vaccines – or to the relatives of patients who have been killed by them.
19. Many people are catching covid 19 after being jabbed.
20. Kate Bingham, the head of the UK Government Vaccine Task force, said: 'There is going to be no vaccination of people under 18'. And that was before all the evidence became available showing the potential dangers of the injections.
21. The BBC claims that if children are jabbed then adults with whom they come into contact will be protected. But even the NHS admits that the jabs don't stop anyone getting covid 19 or passing it on.
22. The technology used in some of these jabs, mRNA technology, has never been properly approved for humans. And as I have said many times it is still experimental. That means that anyone who has the jab is taking part in a dangerous experiment.
23. Children have developing immunological and neurological systems and are even more vulnerable than adults.
24. The Government is analysing waste water to isolate the coronavirus as a way of tracking the infection. Genetic fragments of the virus can be detected in sewage. So it's a safe bet that the experimental jab will be in the sewage too and if it's in the sewage it will be in the drinking water. Take a look at my video about vaccines in drinking water.

25. Drug companies making these injections, including Pfizer, Astra Zeneca and so on, have in the past been fined billions of dollars for fraudulent activities.
26. GPs who are enthusiastically promoting the jabs could make £50,000 a year each from jabbing their patients – or telling their staff to do it.
27. It is an offence to give a drug – including a vaccine – without the patient giving their informed consent. But most individuals who have been jabbed were not given the information required to give informed consent. So those giving the jabs are criminals.
28. Spike proteins in the mRNA vaccines could trigger an immune reaction against syncytin-1, a protein which is responsible for the development of a placenta in mammals and humans. How will this affect young girls? No one knows.
29. Covid 19 jabs were only given emergency licences because there was thought to be a global pandemic. But the Government in the UK knew in March 2020 that the coronavirus was no more of a threat than the flu. Now there are plans to give adults and children jabs several times a year.
30. It is possible that many, many patients will die or fall seriously ill when they come into contact with what is called the 'wild' coronavirus.

Share this information. Make photocopies and hand them to doctors, journalists, nurses, teachers, relatives and friends. Everything I've told you is absolutely true. Only murderers and lunatics support giving covid 19 jabs to children.

They enemy want to do it. They need to do it. And unless we stop them, they will do it.

We won't be silenced

by ROSIE FINCH

During World War II a German underground movement called Die Weisse Rose (The White Rose) distributed leaflets calling on people to resist the Nazi regime. In one of their leaflets they stated that every human is entitled to a government that guarantees the freedom of every person and the wellbeing of the community.

EVERY human should be able to reach their natural goal, their earthly joy, autonomously and by their own accord. The White Rose spoke to people's conscience and urged them to wake up from their dangerous lethargy. In their fourth leaflet the members of Die Weisse Rose wrote: "We won't be silenced, we are your bad conscience, the White Rose won't leave you in peace." We from The White Rose UK have picked up on this essence.

The German resistance group consisted of the students Sophie Scholl and her brother Hans Scholl, as well as their friend Christoph Probst and single other members. Coming from a Christian background, the Scholl siblings turned back to Christian morals after having spent some time in the Hitler Jugend. Spreading anti-regime leaflets was a dangerous activity, and after being caught, several members of the White Rose were sentenced to death or imprisoned by the Nazis. After the executions of the Scholl siblings, a friend still carried on with distributing leaflets entitled "And their spirit lives on". With this in mind, The White Rose UK is part of the continuation.

The disproportionate and dehumanising covid restrictions are a disgrace to humanity. Masks, social distancing and the so-called vaccination are causing more harm than preventing anything.

Experts from across the world have warned that the so-called covid vaccines will do a lot of harm and now with over one million adverse reactions – many of them severe – and over 1400 deaths in the UK alone, there is proof that the covid spike jab is dangerous.

People protesting against lockdowns have been arrested and treated like criminals for gathering and exercising their right of free speech. At the same time, YouTube, Facebook and Twitter have been censoring videos and posts that do not match the current trend of the mainstream media. Schools have turned into social engineering sites. Forcing children to wear masks and keeping them at a distance in class and on school grounds is deeply dehumanising, and will have a damaging effect on their mental development. Parents should stand up against these tyrannical methods. It's not the way we grew up, and we should let our children grow up with the same freedoms we enjoyed!

Bit by bit, we have given up our freedom and our rights out of fear of a virus. After the first lockdown it was evident that more people died from the lockdown than from the virus. Our economy will suffer severely and poverty will increase. How many people have lost their job and how many businesses are ruined due to the lockdowns?

The so-called 'new normal' is not normal, it's entirely abnormal and we should never get used to it!

It's time to take over responsibility and to make decisions for ourselves, or else, the next generation of grown-ups will not experience the same freedoms we've had before this manufactured covid crisis.

Like the White Rose in Germany that resisted the Nazi regime, we encourage people to resist the covid tyranny. We do not want any more lockdowns and demand an end to all restrictions. Visit your friends and family, the lonely, the vulnerable and the dying. We are humans and not controllable robots. We need to socially interact, without anti-social distancing and without face masks.

Journalists, teachers, doctors, lawyers and politicians should stand up for the truth and speak publicly. If the majority of people rid themselves of fear and panic and make use of common sense, those who want to control us will eventually have to give up, and we will have a future with peace and freedom for our children and grandchildren.

While continuing The White Rose in the UK we are driven by the same spirit as the Weisse Rose during Nazi Germany—a spirit that is coming from the conscience, that rises against injustice; a spirit nurtured by the depth of the heart where truth is embedded.

A stand at your MP's

by ELOISE SCHULTZ

INSPIRED by Stand In The Park, freedom fighter Daryl Brown has created a new kind of stand - A Stand Outside Your Local MP's Office. Gathering outside Keir Starmer's office on Friday 11th June at 2pm, their first week had a turnout of around a dozen people. They heard lots of approval from the public, described as "a deafening orchestra of trucks and buses beeping their support". There was a police presence, but leaders say there was no confrontation, just an assurance of being peaceful and leaving the space clean (no stickers on the windows, guys).

The event seems highly promising in effectiveness, partly due to its three focused and realistic goals. They aim for their MP to actively oppose: restrictions on civil liberties, forced or coerced experimental medical treatments, and diktats issued by NHS apps. These goals effectively encompass current and future worries. For example, digital ID requirements based on vaccine status would infringe upon civil liberties as well as medical freedom – no matter how they dress it up. To paraphrase Shakespeare, "an ID card by any other name would be as oppressive". These clear and comprehensive messages, delivered directly to the MP and their team on a regular basis, will begin to place essential pressure on the government to prevent such developments and reverse current injustices.

For a long time, "write to your MP" has been common advice for any concerned local citizen. Unfortunately those of us who have bothered to write to our MP this past year have had somewhat apathetic and scripted responses. Nonetheless, MPs are still strongly placed to effect change and make our voices heard. This applies particularly to Labour MPs (hear me out) as their duty is not only to represent their constituents, but to oppose and challenge the majority party where needed. These Stands, if we can spread them far and wide, will remind them of their duty no matter how much they don't want to face it.

Politicians have a way of careful wording, that can help those who sit on the fence to recognise truths and statements that they do agree with, inside a message they've been conditioned to dismiss. Using this skill as well as their 'respectable' status, we can make the politicians work for us as they were intended to do. They will listen to us, and others will listen to them.

With this to look forward to, Daryl and I urge readers to begin your own Stand outside your local MP's office. They may start small, but do not be discouraged. We've seen Stand In The Park come from tiny groups and even one-man stands - the Chelmsford Stand In The Park was only 4 people in its first week. But it only takes one person to have the courage to stand, and others will soon join.

Fridays, 2pm. You're all invited.

Why magnesium is THE most important mineral missing from your life!

Magnesium helped to save my life thirty five years ago

MAGNESIUM is the key mineral that is missing from our soil and hence our food. With the advent of industrial farming, pesticides and other farming practices that strip the soil of nutrients, the loss of magnesium has perhaps been the most disastrous for human health. The addition of chlorine and in some areas, fluoride to the water supply, inhibits the bioavailability of magnesium even further. Stress, the daily use of sugar, caffeine and pharmaceutical drugs further depletes the body's supply of this vital mineral.

Magnesium is now known to be essential for thousands of enzymatic reactions in the body, including the transmission of nerve impulses, muscle movements, gene maintenance, food metabolism and protein formation. It is required to give the "spark of life" to the metabolic functions involving the creation of energy and the synthesis of proteins.

by CLIVE DE CARLE

Almost everything depends on it!

How do I know if I'm deficient in Magnesium?

Symptoms can include one or more of the following:

- Muscle cramps / twitches / restless leg / contractions / tremors / spasms
- Menstrual cramps / PMS
- Heart variability / palpitations / rapid heartbeat / arrhythmia / atrial fibrillation / atherosclerosis / hypertension (high blood pressure)
- Depression and irritability / anxiety / panic attacks / hyper-excitability / confusion / personality changes / delirium / hallucinations
- Dementia and neurodegenerative diseases
- Diabetes (type 2) / metabolic syndrome
- Weakness / fatigue / fibromyalgia
- Rheumatoid arthritis / osteoarthritis / osteoporosis
- Low calcium levels / calcium stones
- Sound and light sensitivity
- Insomnia and sleep apnoea
- Nausea / vomiting / loss of appetite

- Migraines / headaches
- Low serum potassium and parathyroid levels
- Kidney disease
- Potential death from heart failure

Magnesium Benefits

Whilst magnesium is vital to address the above deficiency symptoms, ensuring the body has a plentiful supply can be life changing. My own experience of curing my arthritis is testament to the healing power of this miracle mineral.

Stress / Anxiety

Also known as "nature's chill pill", sufficient magnesium levels restrict the release of stress hormones such as cortisol, and acts as a filter to prevent them from entering the brain. Excess cortisol contributes to anxiety, brain fog, depression, memory loss, insomnia and many other mental disorders.

When the body is under stress it creates stress hormones which cause a cascade of physical effects which quickly consume magnesium.

Another way that magnesium helps to combat stress is by binding to and stimulating GABA receptors in the brain. GABA (gamma-aminobutyric acid) is an inhibitory neurotransmitter that slows down brain activity. When GABA is low, the brain can become stuck in the "on" position, making it extremely difficult to relax.

Heart Health

The most extreme example of chronic magnesium deficiency is a heart attack. When the body's supply of magnesium runs out, the heart is unable to relax its contractions which results in heart failure. This is known in emergency rooms the world over – if a heart attack patient survives long enough to get to hospital, they are immediately injected with magnesium sulphate.

Magnesium helps to regulate heart rhythm, co-ordinating the activity of the heart muscle and the nerves that initiate heartbeat. Low magnesium levels can cause heart palpitations and arrhythmias (irregular heartbeats).

It stops the coronary arteries from having spasms which can cause the intense chest pains known as angina. Magnesium relaxes the muscles that control blood vessels, allowing the blood to flow more freely, whilst helping to equalise the levels of potassium and sodium in the blood.

Brain Boosting

With the highest concentrations of magnesium found in the brain and the heart, it is known that decreased brain electrical activity is correlated with low magnesium levels. In his book, "Magnesium, What Your Doctor Needs to Know", author Nolan Edwards states, "For maintaining plasticity of synapses, adequate magnesium content in cerebrospinal fluid is essential. Magnesium is used for the proper activity of many enzymes within brain cells that control memory and cellular function."

Long and short-term memory are also reliant on an adequate supply of magnesium. Dr Timothy Sheehan describes the mechanism of magnesium in the brain in his book, "The Oscillating Brain": "Magnesium ions are the 'gatekeepers' between NMDA (short for N-methyl D aspartate) neuroreceptors and the cell membranes. These neuroreceptors are responsible for both short-term and long-term memory. Without adequate magnesium, there is essentially no 'soldiers at the gate' to block the free flow of ions, and this can lead to cell death, and issues related to short and long-term recall."

Supplementing with magnesium might be the most life changing thing you can do right now! The most dangerous side effect is smiling.

Have you taken the magnet challenge?

AS children, we all played with magnets. Delighted to see them jump and spin. To test what they stuck to, and what objects they didn't. And, when we let go of them, no magnet ever stuck to our fingers.

When I first saw a video of a magnet sticking to the arm of somebody, I smiled and quickly flicked by to something of real interest. Then someone sent me another magnet video. I hesitated slightly and moved on to something else. That evening, two friends called me to confirm their findings. Anne had been at a dinner party and had waited until the guests were relaxed on their second bottle of wine before pulling her magnet out. Carl had filmed himself attaching a magnet to the arm of his mother and it had gone viral.

A quick search on the internet found the usual suspect 'fact checkers' debunking this magnet phenomenon - a clear telltale sign of a cover-up. My 'favourite' fact checker of all,

by MARK PLAYNE

Snopes, had featured Carl's video of his mother, calling it fake. There was only one thing to do - I packed my camera, jumped on the train down to the South Coast to find out for myself whether a magnet would be attracted to his mother's arm, or not.

Carl quickly demonstrated the spot of magnetism on his mother. Even though I was inches away, I asked Carl to take the camera so I could try for myself. Feeling a magnet being tugged out of your hand, by a subtle yet defined magnetic force from under the skin of a living human being, is quite a shock.

Sensing the magnet being repelled, and trying to flip so that the correct polarity was in contact with the skin, was mind-blowing.

We had just established the basics on camera. The magnet had stuck to Carl's mother's arm due to an indisputable magnetic attraction. The fact checkers, including Snopes, Reuters, the BBC reality check and Fact Check-alongside a multitude of US main stream TV channels-were deceiving the public.

You can see the short documentary we made via the website called 'The

Magnet Challenge - True or False?'

The call out for people to take up the #magnetchallenge using neodymium magnets was working and the videos were appearing on social media from all over the world.

Our next step was to take a team to St James Park, London on the day of the 29th of May Freedom protest to ask random people to take part in the Magnet Challenge on film. We were joined by Dr T.

As we were setting up, news came in that the BBC had made a joint announcement with the NHS, calling for the banning of neodymium magnets claiming they were now deemed a risk to children. A coincidence? Maybe. However, we suspected that drawing such flack with such precise timing, confirmed that we were over the target.

Our walk-about challenge within the park caused mixed reactions. Some were near tears, two young Israelis refused to accept the fact staring them in the face and others laughed it off - even if nervously. Importantly, Dr T., a UK trained doctor, had now verified our findings on camera.

Are you aware of the decline of essential life giving minerals in our food?

Centuries of mining, farming, irrigation and acid rain have eroded life giving minerals from our soil. Most fruits, vegetables and grains are grown in mineral deficient soils. In other words, even when we try to eat healthy, we simply are not getting the minerals we need from our food.

Replenish those vital lost minerals your body needs with natural deposits of plant matter from over 65 million years ago.

Ireland is run by a criminal cabal

by STEPHEN MANNING

MOST Irish people live under the misapprehension that the government works for them. Sadly, the opposite is true. The establishment - those who run the judiciary, media, government, Gardai and civil service and are united in their common goal to procure ever more status, wealth and power for themselves - do so largely through coercive dishonesties at the collective expense of the rest of us.

These largely amoral people depend upon the unquestioning compliance of their employees and the ignorance, obedience or submission of the general population to achieve their goals.

The 'Separation Of Powers' (three branches of government) doctrine was designed to eliminate insider corruption and thereby guarantee Democracy and the Rule of Law. The three branches are the Legislature (Parliament), Executive (Head of Government and the Cabinet) and the Judiciary.

The mainstream media or '4th Estate' is supposed to provide another layer of protection for citizens reporting uncompromisingly on the issues of the day, exposing errant authority figures and holding them to account ensuring openness and transparency amongst those who call the shots. This is fundamental in any healthy society that values truth and justice.

Unfortunately, the media can no longer be described as remotely independent. It is owned and controlled by a select few who put vested interests before the public interest regardless of the social or moral consequences.

For example, a story that may be embarrassing to a compromised politician who also has a role in guaranteeing revenue to his local radio station in the form of say, HSE vaccine ads, will not be aired. Because, in the end it's all about the bottom line, keeping the cabal happy and scandals buried.

The pharmaceutical industry is the highest funder of advertising revenue in the United States and increasingly so in Ireland. Shouldn't that fact raise obvious concerns about the integrity or quality of the news when such massive profits can be earned by deceiving the public?

It should really trouble us that those same news outlets received over five billion dollars from the likes of Pfizer (who paid out the biggest criminal fine in US history), Moderna, Merck, Johnson & Johnson on in Ireland (i.e. "crime in the streets vs crime in the suites") the DPP's Office turns a blind eye as the interests of the cabal must always come first.

A voracious cabal who knows that in order to foist their various schemes on an unwitting public under the guise of 'lawful propriety' they politically-sanctioned appropriations of national resources, the deployment of clever tax avoidance schemes, and the all-too-cosy relationships between big business, media and politicians, and the true picture starts to emerge.

Ireland is by far the world leader in the dark art of 'shadow banking':

how-and-why 'big business' gets away with so much corruption and criminality. This is the legacy of greed and destruction synonymous with FFFG governments through the decades which has left Ireland in ruins time and time again. For once and for all, it needs to be brought to an end.

DOCTORS KILL MORE PEOPLE THAN CRIMINALS

LEGAL MEDS KILL MORE PEOPLE THAN STREET DRUGS

GOVERNMENTS KILL MORE PEOPLE THAN TERRORISTS

et al, who, quite coincidentally of course, are profiting massively from this so-called 'global health crisis'.

Even if it is obvious that crimes are being committed on an industrial scale by corporate dirt-bags sitting in plush offices, and even if those crimes are costing the taxpayer many multiples of whatever 'ordinary' crime is going need the compliance and protection of the national authorities to secure government contracts at 'highly favourable terms' for example; or, to continue the petty frauds and larcenies (largely via the banks and vulture funds) that destroy ordinary peoples' lives. Add to this the mass plundering of the Irish people through we carry over €200 billion in debt and yet still 'own' over $300 billion of USA debt, making our tiny country the third largest holder of US debt after China and Japan. If we add the fact that Ireland hosts the European headquarters of Google, Facebook, Apple and Microsoft and many Big Pharma giants, we understand
